Memory. A good memory is a valuable asset to one in business.
Remembering the names of customers so as to greet them by name the next time they call makes an appeal to their vanity. Remembering the likes and dislikes of a customer will aid in better serving that customer.

Tact. Many persons in business who have some splendid qualities have lost goodwill and customers for their business because they lacked tact. They did not have the ability to do or say the proper thing so as not to offend others. The shoe salesperson who comments to a customer, "You have a foot that is unusually hard to fit," displays a lack of tact.

Most of us are lucky, we have the natural ability to take information into our minds and store it, leave it for future reference. Our brain is our most important resource, and we never really stop to think of what it could be like if one small part of it developed slower than the others. Suppose your ability to learn was impaired, emotionally and socially you were absolutely normal, but to learn Math and English, with your friends, always never quite getting the point, needing more time, wishing only someone would help you more . . .

It is to these students we are dedicating our book, for their problem has been recognized, they are receiving the help they need. The Special Education Class of Bellingham High School has made progress. The children now receive the individual attention they need to develop fully their learning abilities.
